

Change the Language to Hide the Duck

To maintain power in politics the leaders, and/or ruling party, must control the narrative to favor their policies and decisions. Therefore, if they make a foolish mistake, the best way to cover it up is change the language in order to mask, or distract, from the reality and consequences of their poor judgment.

A recent example of this is the immigrant crisis at the U.S./Mexican border. We will call this "the duck" based on the well-known phrase "if it looks like a duck, sounds like a duck and walks like a duck, it probably is a duck".

So the key to hiding the existence of this "duck", it is garnering enough support from as many sources as possible to ignore it, or deny its existence. Therefore, it cannot appear to walk like a duck. This means keeping as many government officials as possible away from media coverage at the border, and trying to prevent any photo opportunities.

Next, it cannot sound like a duck. This means the news media must cooperate and support the government narrative that there is no "crisis" at the border. Instead, there is just a "challenge" at the border.

Finally, it cannot look like a duck. In order to achieve this, past propaganda must be sourced and displayed that demonstrates a so-called crisis at the border by a previous government administration, even if it does not accurately compare a past duck to the present duck.

Because the tactic of manipulating language is so effective, with assistance from sources like the media, it can now be deployed to other areas. For instance, to minimize the negative impact of thousands of illegal aliens entering a sovereign country, it is critical to change the language that has been used for decades and now describe them as "undocumented non-citizens". Now, this crisis does not sound as severe as it really is.

Similarly, when a pandemic was released in 2019 that killed millions worldwide, concentrated efforts were made by government and media to deflect from its origin. In other words, they did not want to call it a "duck", or the "CCP virus". Instead, it was changed as quickly as possible to Covid 19 making it less offensive because doing business with China is central to many of the American businesses that donate to U.S. politicians and their parties.

So manipulating the nomenclature that has been part of our culture for generations is central to the political agenda now. Why? Because "the means justifies the end" and that "end" is maintaining power under any circumstances and by using any means. Therefore, every time a politician or his/her party changes the meaning of a word that truly identifies something, or someone, it should send up a "red flag". Sadly, this trend is becoming part of the educational system and unless parents wake up to this tactic their children will be indoctrinated with more lies than they already are under this current system, which Almighty God describes as "evil" (Galatians 1:4). Instead, our children need to identify something, or someone, accurately and call it what it is. Any other method is deceptive and harmful.

But let your 'Yes' be 'Yes,' and your 'No,' 'No.' For whatever is more than these is from the evil one (Matthew 5:37; emphasis added).
